Are Politicians Killing Democracy in Your State?

Here’s how they redraw your congressional maps:

- State Legislature
- Independent Commissions
- Political Commissions
- State Legislative with Advisory/Backup Commissions
- One Congressional District

Every 10 years, states redraw their maps to reflect population changes following the census. The process generally benefits the party in power, leading to unfair maps that allow politicians to pick their own voters, instead of the reverse. In 2018, we will elect state representatives that will influence how redistricting is implemented after the 2020 census. Let them know: you’re voting for fair districting.

Source: https://ballotpedia.org/State-by-state_redistricting_procedures
Every 10 years, states redraw their maps to reflect population changes following the census. The process generally benefits the party in power, leading to unfair maps that allow politicians to pick their own voters, instead of the reverse. In 2018, we will elect state representatives that will influence how redistricting is implemented after the 2020 census. Let them know: you’re voting for fair districting.

Source: https://ballotpedia.org/State-by-state_redistricting_procedures