IBEW members working underground have experienced sweeping changes in recent years. Private contractors are performing an ever-larger share of the work once done by public utilities. Increasingly technical equipment has put more demands on everyone. And concerns about safety linger, in part because there’s been little standardization throughout the industry.

But Bill Sullivan and his colleagues with Aldridge Electric, a signatory contractor based in Libertyville, Ill., are working to change that. In a coordinated effort with IBEW members, Aldridge designed a pair of trailers that will provide state-of-the-art training for underground workers across the country in a safe environment.

“Previously, training on utility projects was done on the job,” said Sullivan, a former member of Downers Grove, Ill., Local 15 who is now Aldridge’s utility training manager. “It was the sharing of tribal knowledge from whoever you were working with. If you were with someone who was really an ace, you might be fine, but it wasn’t standardized. You were working in a dark space and it was kind of a trial-and-error thing.

“Now we have an official training program through the use of the training trailers,” he said. “Everyone is being trained by the same manual and same trainer. The program creates a level playing field so everyone is on the same page.”

The two trailers made their debut last fall at a Pepco service center in Washington, drawing IBEW members from across the Eastern seaboard. Along with the training team, the units will move across the country, heading to multiple sites this spring.

“I was really impressed,” said Washington Local 70 Business Manager William Tipton, whose membership is primarily comprised of underground workers and Pepco employees. “It’s a step forward. I think every company doing this type of work should have something set up like this.”

Aldridge is one of the nation’s leading electrical contractors with annual revenues approaching $500 million. The company is well known for its work on complex infrastructure projects, including significant contracts with utilities and large-scale public contracts. “It’s pretty simple,” said the company’s owner, Alex Aldridge. “We want everyone to go home safe every night. That’s our culture and the reason we invested in developing this training program.”

“Giving underground workers state-of-the-art training in a safe environment is a priority,” International President Lonnie R. Stephenson said. “It’s essential for our members, and it gives our partners another tool when pursuing work on underground projects that are becoming more common in the electric industry.”
Safety: Job No. 1

One reason I’m proud to serve as International President is our leading role in making the electrical industry safer. Safety was one of the primary motivations for Henry Miller and our founders when they conceived of this great union in 1891, and it’s an enormous part of our success to this day.

In this issue of The Electrical Worker, you’ll read about how the IBEW worked with our partner Aldridge Electric, a signatory contractor based in Libertyville, Ill., to develop safety training trails that will travel North America teaching our members how to work safer and more efficiently underground.

Manhole work remains some of the most dangerous work we do, but the demand for this kind of work continues to rise.

The result is that more and more linemen are performing underground work, and that means that the IBEW and our partners need to adapt, to keep up with industry changes.

We’ve always been on the cutting edge of the industry and technology — whether it was Henry Miller climbing a telegraph pole or members of Lansing, Mich., Local 665 building a nuclear particle accelerator.

But it’s fitting that “S” is the first letter in “SPARQ,” the acronym embodying our Code of Excellence, because safety has always been priority No. 1 at the IBEW.

There is absolutely nothing more important to the officers, the members and the families of the IBEW than making sure each and every one of you comes home safe at the end of a workday. It’s why we invest in the best, most up-to-date training and why we hold every member, every employer, every government official accountable for the decisions that affect your well-being.

Every day, I want you to ask yourself, “What can I do to make my job safer? What can I do to ensure that my co-workers and IBEW brothers and sisters are as safe as they can be on the job?”

Alan Aldridge and the leaders at Aldridge Electric did that when they decided to take an idea for better underground training and run with it. We’re proud to have been part of their project, and I hope those of you who perform this sort of work take advantage when the training trailers come to your area.

But we can all do more. Because of your union, you can speak up when you’re asked to do something that makes you feel unsafe. You can be a part of the solution, knowing that you’re protected by your union contract.

It takes all of us, looking out for ourselves and for one another, to create a true culture of safety. I’m lucky to have each one of you as partners in that effort.

Voting Matters

If you have ever doubted the power of one person’s vote, pay close attention to the story on the opposite page. You’ll read about last November’s election in Virginia, where control of the entire state House of Delegates — and the future of pro-worker legislation — came down to just one vote.

A delegates’ race ended in a tie, with the final decision of who would take the seat left to a random drawing of names from a bowl. The Republican candidate won, leaving the GOP with control of Virginia’s legislature by a single seat.

Just one vote would have made all the difference in the world when it came time to pass pro-worker legislation.

It is just another reminder of the importance of every single member of the IBEW getting out to vote in every election.

Because when it comes to issues that matter to working families — whether it’s health and safety regulations, protecting the right of employees to collectively bargain, or prevailing wage laws — elections have consequences.

It is important that not only do we vote, but we make sure our families vote as well. There are too many politicians out there coming after the good wages and our strong health care and retirement benefits for your family to stay home.

But the Virginia election is also a reminder of the political maxim made famous by former Speaker of the House Tip O’Neill: “All politics is local.”

It is at the state and local level where some of the most important decisions are made regarding the issues that matter to the IBEW. Issues like right-to-work, prevailing wage and public workers’ rights are being fought in statehouses across the country. And we need to be part of that struggle.

It is also on the state level where congressional and state legislative districts will be redrawn in just two years. Some politicians have abused the redistricting process to draw district boundaries which serve only to maximize their party’s votes at the expense of the public will. The process has driven out moderates and left us with no space for compromise and working together, two of America’s founding principles.

Gerrymanaging has also minimized the voices of union members and encouraged the election of politicians more interested in appeasing ultra-right wing special interests than building a bipartisan commitment to help our middle-class.

Even on the county or city level, issues like project labor agreements, infrastructure spending and workplace protections are increasingly on the top of many lawmakers’ agendas. And the IBEW must be part of the discussion.

But we can only do that if IBEW members and their families vote.

Many men and women gave their lives so we could enjoy the right to vote. And as easy as it is to be cynical about politics, it can only change if each and every one of us exercises that right and makes sure the IBEW is heard at the ballot box.

IBEW: A Proud Family Tradition

I am writing to you to see if you will put this picture of these two old retired IBEW members in the Electrical Worker.

I’m the taller of the two in this picture. The other man is my cousin, Curtis Brown. The picture was made November 30th, 2017, at his 100th birthday party. Curtis served in WWII. He went ashore at Omaha Beach and fought across France, Belgium, and Germany.

After he got out of the Army in 1945, he went to work for Arkansas Power and Light Co. in El Dorado, Ark., as an apprentice lineman. In early 1956, he joined Local 436, which was a construction local. Later, the power company formed their union, Local 1705. After several years as a line-man, he moved to Magnolia, Ark., and worked as a serviseman until he retired.

Curtis has been a union member for 71 years. He and his wife live in Magnolia. She turned 95 years old January 20th.

I worked as an electrician at International Paper Co. in Pine Bluff, Ark., for 40 years, where I was a member of Local 2933. I served as treasurer of my local for over 25 years and retired in 1999. I have been a union member for over 57 years.

I am a veteran of the U.S. Army and served in Germany from 1957 to 1959 during the Cold War.

Safety is Our Responsibility

[Responding to the OSHA inspectors story on page 8 of this issue]

For our own protection, we need to be our own inspectors. Like it or not, IBEW members have the most education and safety training of all the crafts. We need to bring violations to the attention of management and we need the backing of the halls to ensure those individuals who whistleblow are not retaliated against. This will become even more important as the NLRB loses its teeth and places anti-labor individuals on the board.

Just as we have the ability to be our own stewards, we must also have the courage and importance as the NLRB loses its teeth and places anti-labor individuals on the board.

My vote won't make a difference."

You hear it every election season. Maybe you've even said it yourself. But after what happened in Virginia's 2017 general election, none of us can ever say it again. One ballot, a single additional vote for a Newport News, Va., school teacher, would have ended GOP control of the statehouse and opened the door to a worker-friendly legislative agenda.

In fact, a lone ballot nearly did flip control until a three-judge panel controversially intervened, deciding its confusing markings showed intent to vote for the Republican. That left the 94th district race between Democrat Shelly Simonds and incumbent David Yancey tied at 54,648 votes apiece.

The race was decided in the end by random drawing, with election officials pulling Yancey's name out of a bowl, leaving his party in control of the House by a single seat. Had they drawn Simonds' name, the parties would have shared control, each with 50 seats.

"I think we'll be using this as an example from now until the end of time on how important it is to get out and vote," said Jeff Rowe, businessman of Newport News Local 1340.

"One of the direct, positive benefits of the election was to have a labor voice in those meetings ... to put an emphasis on things that are important to working people."

– Local 1340 Business Manager Jeff Rowe

"Anybody who knows how the system works knows that you have to get legislation through subcommittees first, and now we're only a one-person minority. All we have to do is get one other person to agree with us and we can at least get it out of committee. In the past, we'd have to come up. We didn't have labor people, for instance, on Bob McDonnell's transition team," he said, referring to Virginia's most recent GOP governor, who served from 2010 to 2014.

Virginia isn't the only state where unions and workers declared victory in November and the months since. In New Jersey, an army of union volunteers helped pro-worker candidates take back the governor's office and add to their majorities in the state House and Senate. More than a dozen IBEW members were elected and re-elected to state and local offices last November. New Jersey and Virginia are two of the only states with regular elections in odd-numbered years.

As one of his first orders of business, newly sworn-in Gov. Phil Murphy signed an executive order Jan. 16 in support of equal pay for women. His Republican predecessors had been against equal pay for women. His Republican predecessors had been against equal pay for women. His Republican predecessors had been against equal pay for women. All 40 Virginia state Senate seats and re-electing Attorney General Mark Herring. All 435 U.S. House seats and 33 of the state's 18 congressional seats. The ruling gives pro-worker U.S. House candidates a fighting chance to represent Pennsylvania, and it could have ripple effects nationally. But it wouldn't have happened if voters hadn't gone to the polls in 2017 and elected three Democratic justices, for a 5-2 majority on the state court.

Leading up to all the state and local elections Nov. 6, voters across the country can expect to hear the story of how just one more ballot — one cast for a pro-worker candidate in a Virginia House district could have changed everything.

"We beat that drum constantly — that every vote counts," Rowe said. "Now we've got proof."

Lobbying in Richmond, Va., in late January, Jeff Rowe, center, and Jim Avery of Newport News, Va., Local 1340, discuss workers' issues with state Senator Monty Mason, pictured at desk. Rowe is the local's business manager and also president of IBEW's Virginia State Association.

Her victory marked the 34th time nationwide that a state legislative seat had flipped from red to blue since the start of 2017. But the big test comes this November. All 435 U.S. House seats and three of the 100 U.S. Senate seats will be on the ballot, along with 36 governors' races and the majority of statehouse seats.

Critical judicial seats are also up for grabs. Thirty-two states will hold state supreme court elections in 2018, all but three of them on Nov. 6. Deciding who sits on the bench are some of the most important choices that voters make, as the Pennsylvania Supreme Court illustrated in January.

The court struck down a partisan map of the state's congressional districts, which represented an election system rigged against working people, and ordered a new map in time for May's primaries. Although Pennsylvania is a swing state with more registered Democrats than Republicans, the gerrymandered map resulted in the GOP holding 13 of the state's 18 congressional seats.

THE IBEW's 19TH ANNUAL PHOTO CONTEST

Nearly 1,776 feet above Manhattan, Joe Buonocore did something very few others would: he looked down.

Instead of vertigo, Buonocore, a journeyman wireman and specialist climber for New York Local 3, captured his mind-bending view of fellow member Chris Bugeaunu hanging from the spire of One World Trade Center.

Don’t worry, the iPhone was attached to a lanyard. When you are more than a quarter-mile off the ground, everything is.

His picture was one of hundreds submitted for the 19th Annual IBEW Photo Contest, and it rose high above the other 14 finalists during the month-long online vote. It won nearly one in five of more than 7,000 votes cast.

The finalists this year included new takes on classic subjects that show up year after year, including “power lines against a glorious sunset,” and “members at work in beautiful places.”

But this year’s finalists went far beyond the expected. How many of us have seen a nuclear reactor refueled or dawn’s light reflecting off water erupting from cliff-side spillways?

More than any recent contest, portraits featured prominently among the finalists and two were voter favorites. The second-place winner’s subject is unmistakably an individual, Honolulu Local 1260’s Cyana Stevens, captured doing what binds the members of the IBEW together: hard work, skillfully done.

We’d love to see more. So, turn your phones to landscape, max out the resolution, and start capturing your brothers and sisters close-up. Let the world see who we are, and in our faces, our strength.

WINNER

JOE BUONOCORE
NEW YORK LOCAL 3

From the street, the spire atop One World Trade Center looks impossibly delicate and far away, a slender needle hung with what look like small silver spheres.

Not for Buonocore and the other eight members of the Local 3 climbing crew. For them, the 408-foot spire—which on its own would be taller than the tallest building in at least 14 states—is a vertical job site and second home. For two years they have been transforming it from a decorative flourish into the indispensable heart of New York’s media, radio, television, and communications system.

In this picture, taken in July, Buonocore and Bugeaunu were replacing HDTV antennas. On another day, they installed dishes to receive broadcasts from TV trucks or relays for the NYPD’s communications system. And most days, when they take their breaks, out come the cameras.

“We all take pictures. When we are above the clouds; when fog rolls in from Brooklyn; the sunsets and sunrises,” Buonocore said. “Our phones are full of them.”

It’s one of the advantages when your work starts where the office building ends.

Buonocore said several of the crew submitted pictures for the contest and agreed that any money they won would go to the Local 3 strike fund to support the thousands of members who have been striking against Charter Communications for nearly a year.
Here's what we know about Honolulu Local 1260 member Cyana Stevens. She is strong, focused and skilled. Lee, a junior control officer, took this picture while assisting Stevens, who was changing out burner guns on a generating unit at Oahu’s Kahe Power Plant. The concentrated effort resonated with hundreds of voters. Lee said the picture was about more than the work Stevens was doing, though. “I wanted to show that not only are our brothers working hard on a daily basis, but also our sisters out there in the field,” Lee said.

The symmetry of Miller’s remarkable photograph provides stability in a year that often seemed off-kilter. Miller, the Local 11 press secretary, took this picture of inside wireman Alton Wilkerson holding the flag during the annual May Day march to downtown L.A. Everything outside the frame may be in flux, but Wilkerson is a still point in the center of this image. The buildings, rigidly checked with windows, rise straight and true. The stripes of the flag flow calmly into the horizon.

Don’t Make This Mistake

Thinking about retirement can be overwhelming. The list of things to consider often seems endless.

But the most important calculation is the same for everyone: how to squeeze every last dime out of your retirement savings, leaving nothing on the table.

That’s why International Secretary-Treasurer Kenneth W. Cooper wants to make sure that — for “A” members, at least — maintaining your IBEW international membership finds a prominent place on your planning checklist.

“Failing to stay on the union’s rolls could mean losing out on the payments you’ve earned through the Pension Benefit Fund,” Cooper said. “It’s not the biggest pension you’ll receive, but you worked hard for it, and you deserve to have it.”

The IBEW established the PBF in 1927 to provide for electricians, wiremen and linemen what was then considered a rare retirement benefit. Over the last 90 years, the fund has grown to become an important supplementary pension for the IBEW’s “A” members.

Despite its relatively small size, Pension and Reciprocity Department Director Bruce Burton says the PBF represents some of the best value for money you’re likely to find in retirement. “In about four years, you get back every dime you put into the PBF,” he said. “And that’s before you factor in the plan’s death benefit, which can help ease the burden on your family.”

But problems arise, Cooper said, when some members who reach retirement age or who take an early retirement stop paying dues before receiving a letter from his office confirming they have been approved for a PBF pension.

“Whether they mistakenly believe that they no longer need to pay dues once they reach the retirement age for their local’s pension plan,” Cooper said, or “perhaps they are simply unaware of the benefits available to them through the PBF — either way, we want to make sure they get what they’re owed.”

According to the IBEW Constitution, members who stop paying dues to the International Office must be dropped from the union’s rolls within six months. When this happens, they forfeit what they have accrued toward the PBF.

About half of the union’s membership starts as “A” members — primarily in the construction branch — but any member can upgrade their status to participate in the PBF. Having more “A” members results in a stronger pension fund for everyone.

Besides the PBF, other benefits of “A” membership include a death benefit of at least $3,000, which requires just six months of IBEW service for a member’s beneficiary to receive payment. Also, many local unions require “A” membership to run for leadership positions.

Burton pointed to the 4-year return on investment as evidence of the uniqueness of the PBF, which is one of the only union pensions around that is entirely funded by members’ dues — unlike local pensions or corporate plans where company contributions are part of the collective-bargaining process.

At $4.50 per month for each year of service, the PBF might not seem to be a lot of money. But say you started working in the trade at age 25. If you retire 40 years later and maintain your IBEW membership all the way through, upon retirement you would be eligible to receive a PBF benefit of $580 a month at current levels. By age 75, that 40-year member will have received more than $21,000 from the PBF.

“That’s real money,” Burton said. “It’s easy to forget how quickly it can add up.”

That monthly PBF payment is in addition to any other retirement funds at your disposal — your monthly Social Security check, for example, or pension payments from your local union or your employer’s pension plan. (Those taking early retirement between the ages of 62 and 64 experience a reduction in monthly PBF payments until they reach age 65.)

“In retirement, every bit of income helps,” Cooper said. “You’ve been paying into the PBF every month for your entire career. You deserve to enjoy its benefits.”

Safety Underground
Manhole Training Goes Mobile

ditions into a manhole, they’re going to be lost,” Griffin said. “They don’t know what they’re looking at.”

“Just being able to get your hands on some things that you may or may not experience on a daily basis is extremely important,” said Chomor, who has worked underground around the country for nearly 20 years. “As far as seeing everything you would see in a manhole situation, and physically testing everything in the manhole prior to going out and getting yourself potentially injured, you can be trained properly. You can’t put a dollar figure on safety.”

That’s the point made by Local 70’s Tyton, who noted that even experienced linemen might feel overwhelmed when asked to work underground for the first time. They increasingly are being asked to do so because of changes in the industry. The trailers should make that transition smoother, he said.

“If I’ve sent a lineman that has been working overhead or in transmission or in a substation, if they go into a manhole, they’re going to be lost,” Griffin said. “They don’t know what they’re looking at.”

Fourth District Vice President Brian G. Malloy saw the trailers firsthand when they were in Washington. “I think it shows the commitment from Aldridge to our members’ safety,” he said. “I was quite impressed with it and I was quite impressed by our good relationship with the employer and the customer.”

Sullivan said the trailers aren’t designed to replace apprentice-ship programs. But they do provide an addition-al tool by giving a more realistic simulation of working underground.

“I had one general foreman tell me, “I’ve been underground and been in manholes my whole career, but you’ve added another layer of training and showed me something I didn’t know before,’” Sullivan said. “That’s the best compliment we can get.”

Clockwise from top: Torray James and Andy Chomor assess conditions on a network protector; Aldridge project engineer Chet Chippie with general foreman John Ficetti; and the Aldridge safety trailer, a converted race car hauler with a simulated manhole cut into the top.
The U.S. economy has been on the upswing for years. But finding a solid mid-class job can still be a struggle for some, especially for someone who has spent time behind bars. But Kenneth Davis found help — and success — landing good union-recognized work, in part because of the Metropolitan Washington AFL-CIO Council's Building Futures program, which offers free training and certification to ex-offenders like him, as well as to military veterans and low-income men and women interested in pursuing careers in the building trades.

“It’s a great program for people who don’t know anything about construction,” said Davis, a D.C.-area resident and former prison inmate who is now a residential wireman apprentice at Washington Local 26.

Davis, who spoke about his positive experiences with the program to a recent Building Futures class, said he already had an interest in electrical work when a friend talked to him about the program.

“I heard so many good things about the IBEW that joining it was an easy decision.”

– Washington Local 26 member Kenneth Davis

For nearly 10 years, Building Futures has worked to train, certify and place qualified candidates who have either a high school or general equivalency diploma. Program organizers say it has an 80 percent placement rate.

“Participates like Kenneth succeed because of their own drive and the intensive case management they receive in Building Futures,” said the AFL-CIO’s SonTe DuCote.

Research by the conservative Manhattan Institute think tank showed the benefits of steady work for former inmates, determining that the sooner ex-offenders found work, the lower the likelihood that they might wind up doing something that landed them back in jail.

The 30-year-old Davis graduated from Building Futures in December of 2006, within two weeks, an opportunity opened up for him to join Local 26 as a residential class apprentice and to work on a new mixed-use commercial/residential project on southwest Washington’s waterfront.

“It heard so many good things about the IBEW that joining it was an easy decision,” he said. “Since I joined the union, I have had no bad days.”

More recently, Davis has been working with an electrical contractor on a new 3-story office building in nearby Tysons Corner, Va.

The free, six-week Building Futures program, offered four times a year, is open to qualified candidates who have either a high school or general equivalency diploma. Program organizers say it has an 80 percent placement rate.

“Participates like Kenneth succeed because of their own drive and the intensive case management they receive in Building Futures,” said the AFL-CIO’s SonTe DuCote.

It was so cooperative, in fact, that Peoria Civic Center staff told Flynn they’d never had a partnership work out so well. “They said they usually end up doing all the work, but ‘you guys just took it off with it and made sure it was on time and safe,’” he said.

The Sheet Metal Workers designed and welded the ball, taking inspiration from New York and several small Midwestern cities that have fashioned their own ball drops. Then, with barely a month to go, it was IBEW’s turn.

The lighting design was a challenge, as was the cost. Flynn said the fixture they originally wanted was priced at an impossibly $34,000. But Kaiser tracked one down for $3,000 and the civic center paid the tab.

IBEW apprentices, under the tutelage of Local 34 instructors and Training Director Brandon Currie, figured out how to install, wire and power the fixture, which had 220 LEDs, each with 10 points of light. "It’s the best hands-on training an apprentice can get," Flynn said.

The ball is being stored at the local’s training center and will continue to be a teaching tool. Being rust-proof, it can be reused indefinitely, allowing future apprentices to design, install and program new lighting.

A trial run the week before Christmas confirmed the crane could lift the ball and lower it in a 59-second countdown. Although the crane rental site didn’t have a strong enough power source to illuminate the ball, Flynn said the lights had been tested throughout the building process and worked perfectly.

But to see their creation light up the night sky, IBEW members had to wait with other hardy souls on a New Year’s Eve when the wind chill hit minus 30. Asked by the Peoria Journal Star if it was worth the frigid wait, one beaming family said, “Yes,” without hesitation.

A civic center spokesman told the newspaper that while the bitter cold kept some people away, the unions gave the city a gift that area residents will enjoy for many years to come.

“It was really important to still have the ball drop even though it was very cold,” Megan Pedigo said. “The men and women of the union construction network put a lot of hours into this ball. It’s beautiful. The tradition starts now.”

IBEW Local 26’s Kenneth Davis talks to a Building Futures class about his own success with the program.

Local 34, Training Director Brandon Currie, whose apprentices configured and installed the lights on Peoria’s New Year’s Eve ball, talks about the project with Clare Zell of the Peoria Civic Center on Facebook Live.

Thomas A. Hannigan

The IBEW is saddened to announce the death of Brother Thomas A. Hannigan, an assistant to three international secretaries who represented labor on important federal panels. He died Jan. 5, at the age of 82.

“He was an amazing guy,” said retired International Representative Michael D. Nugent, who worked alongside Hannigan for 10 years and remained close friends after. “He was tenacious.”

Brother Hannigan served in the U.S. Army for two years before being initiated into Chicago Local 314 in 1956. He worked as a journeyman wireman until May 1966, when he moved to Washington, D.C., to serve as the Research and Education Department's assistant director.

He was promoted to department director in 1970 and was named an assistant to then-International Secretary Joseph D. Keenan two years later. Hannigan was named administrative assistant to the International Secretary in 1977 and executive assistant in 1987. Besides Keenan, he also served under International Secretaries Ralph A. Leigon and Jack F. Moore before retiring in 1988.

That was just a small part of Hannigan's service to the Brotherhood. He was a consultant to both President Lyndon Johnson's Committee on Urban Housing and President Richard Nixon's Committee on Low Income Housing.

In 1977, he was nominated by President Jimmy Carter and confirmed by the Senate to serve on the U.S. Metric Board. It came at an important time. The United States was considering joining the international system. He completed an executive education program at Harvard Business School. He was the author of a book, “Managing Tomorrow's High-Performance Unions.”

Released in 1986, it led to an agreement by labor leaders to adopt management practices. Hannigan also was an avid skier and hockey player, even winning a hockey gold medal in Maryland's Senior Olympics. He was a longtime season ticket holders for the company's employee association.

Larry Schell

Following a 46-year career with the IBEW, First District International Representative Larry Schell retired, effective Dec. 1.

Employees at Electrohome, a consumer electronics firm, had only recently voted to join Kitchener, Ontario Local 804, when Schell started work there and joined the IBEW in October 1969. His father had previously served as treasurer for the company's employee association.

The younger Schell worked in Electrohome's engineering department, using lathes and milling machines to make prototypes of new products they'd used in manufacturing.

“Our tolerance level was thirty-thousandths of an inch,” Schell said. “This is all of this is done by computers now, where we did it by hand using micrometers for our final sizing.”

As a member of Local 804, Schell worked on committees dealing with organizing, leadership and negotiating. He was also active in his local's Community Outreach program.

Schell became a full-time business agent in 1973. “We had grown to 3,300 members and had 18 units with almost 30 collective-bargaining agreements,” he said, which spanned a number of industries, manufacturing and service industries. “I was servicing and bargaining from the start.”

Schell said he brought in four companies the following year. In 1978, Schell moved to Edmonton, Alberta, to work as the first full-time organizer for Local 424, which represents a number of trades in that province's capital city. “And I never looked back,” he said. “My average was 10 new companies a year and 440 new members.”

SPOTLIGHT ON SAFETY

Are Fewer OSHA Safety Inspectors Putting Workers at Risk?

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration is at least 40 workplace safety inspectors since early 2017, a troubling trend attributable to Donald Trump's hiring freeze coupled with attrition. Budget cuts under consideration by the Trump administration, an NBC News investigation found, reporting that “critics warn that the staff departures have crippled small, regional OSHA offices that were already short-handed.”

Safety and Health Director David Mullen said the vacancies are disturbing, but it’s too early to determine if fewer OSHA inspectors are correlating to more workers being injured or killed on the job.

Mullen said many factors have to be evaluated before drawing conclusions about workplace accidents. Still, OSHA’s ability to investigate incidents and complaints, issue citations and enforce laws protecting workers is fundamental.

“Generally speaking, the fewer inspectors, the more you’re asking for trouble,” he said. “They really need close oversight because the ownership in those companies doesn’t likely have a dedicated safety staff to make sure they’re controlling their injuries and illness — they’re more likely to fall off the train,” Clyde Payne told NBC.

Is OSHA taking longer to respond to your local’s safety complaints? If so, please contact IBEW Safety and Health Director David Mullen by email at d_mullen@ibew.org or by phone at (202) 238-6402.

Six years later, the Alberta Government appointed Schell to its Labour Board, where he served for 27 years. In addition to presenting hearings to the board, Schell's experience there led him into arbitration work.

“I loved sitting on the Alberta Labour Board and I was on many high-profile cases,” he said. One such case — which dealt with a meat-packaging employer charged with trying to take money away from his company’s defined-benefit pension plan — was found to have breached Alberta's Labour Code.

“Sitting on the Labour Board was beneficial to the IBEW and me,” Schell said. “I learned so much about the code and cases that affected labor in Canada.”

Working on the board, Schell said, gave him and then-First District International Representative Vair Clandening the chance to prepare schools designed specifically for “suits” — union members who work on non-union jobs to organize those workplaces. The schools eventually were made available for locals in all of Canada's provinces.

“People had learned why they needed to organize,” Schell said, “but they didn’t know how to organize a worksite.”

Schell recalled that he and Clandening, who retired in 2007, went on the road in the early to mid-1990s to teach locals about unfair labor practices and IBEW members do many dangerous jobs, like these lineman testing fall-protection equipment. OSHA cutbacks could be putting their lives at risk.

Darrell Taylor

Forty-five years after voting to join the IBEW as a young GE appliance technician, Darrell Taylor retired Nov. 1 as the union's professional and industrial regional organizing coordinator for western Canada.

Taylor began working for GE in his hometown of Edmonton, Alberta, in 1970, earning $500 a week repairing toasters, mixers and coffee makers and other small appliances that people today toss and replace. One day, a coworker asked for a raise, telling the boss that GE appliance technicians in Calgary were being paid more for the same work. “That’s because they’re union,” the boss replied.

Taylor, by then a journeyman repairing refrigerators, dryers and other major appliances, helped organize the technicians, followed by office staff and shipping and distribution center workers. Winning them over was imperative: “We needed more people and more money and had better benefits,” he said. “We didn’t want to go backwards.”

Taylor’s smaller unit was outnumbered but won the vote. “The company fought it the whole way, but we won,” he said. His coworkers elected him unit chair, a position he held for 25 years.

Darrell was huge in us being able to make contacts and persuade the folks to get on board with IBEW,” said Larry Schell, then a Local 424 organizer who’d targeted Taylor to help lead the fight. Three decades later, he urged Taylor to join the IBEW as a full-time organizer.

“I recognized his talents then, and years later I knew he still had them,” said Schell, who retired recently as a First District international representative. He described Taylor as a natural, a master of the “cold call.”

“He had that ability to walk up to anybody and be able to talk to them. He was so good at it. He also had that personality — people could warm up to him very quickly. He had all the ingredients we needed for a good organizer,” Schell said.

“I loved working with him.”

After five years as IBEW’s lead organizer in Alberta and Saskatchewan, Taylor became the regional organizing coordinator for western Canada in 2012. His territory spanned GE’s western border to the Pacific Ocean.

Over the years, he’s organized everyone from water treatment workers at Alberta’s oil sands and telecom workers in the Northwest Territories to tree trimmers in British Columbia — not his hardest sell, Taylor indicated with a chuckle. The Arborcare Tree Service workers had been forced to buy their own tools — even chain saws — among a long list of indignities. “These guys were so mad they were signing cards before we even got in the door,” he said.

Since his retirement, Taylor and his wife have made two extended trips to Arizona in their fifth-wheel camper, trading blizzards for desert heat. He’s looking forward to summer vacations on a northern Alberta lake with their son, daughter and five grandchildren.

Taylor hadn’t been looking to change jobs when Schell suggested he become an organizer in 2002 but said he’s “very happy that I did.” Hanging up his hat has been an adjustment.

“My biggest thing was being out in the field,” he said. “The best part of the job was getting out in the field and talking to the people.”

The IBEW officers, members and staff thank Brother Taylor for his years of service. “We wish him all the health and happiness in retirement.”

The IBEW and other unions scored a massive win in Delaware early this year, when the GOP-dominated Sussex County Council voted 4-1 against a proposed right-to-work law.

“I’m relieved,” said Rick Fridell, a business agent for Philadelphia Local 126, which represents about 350 tree trimmers, outside electrical workers, power linemen and telecommunications employees. “I’m not happy. I know this fight is not over.”

It’s unlikely the proposed ordinance could have been enforced. Delaware does not have a statewide right-to-work law and attorney general Matt Denn said the county ordinance would violate state statutes. The county council’s own lawyer urged members not to pass the ordinance, saying the county would incur significant legal fees in a court battle it likely would lose.

Still, the Jan. 9 vote was a victory for working families in Delaware, which has long been a Democratic stronghold but has seen support for right-to-work laws grow, especially in the politically conservative southern half of the state. Delaware is the second-smallest state in the country and has just three counties, so a county-wide right-to-work law likely would have a larger impact than in most states.

It’s also just one battleground in working families’ fight against conservative attempts to pass right-to-work laws across the country — and even at the federal level. In Ohio, two legislators have introduced state constitutional amendments to implement a right-to-work law there, even though voters resoundingly rejected a similar effort six years ago.

There were reminders during the vote in Sussex County that Delaware’s fight is far from over. Some members said they were voting against the measure because of the anticipated legal costs, volunteering that they would walk with legislators to enact a right-to-work law statewide.

Still, at least one member admitted there was no evidence a right-to-work law would spur business development. Council president Michael Vincent said no busineses had told him they would relocate to Sussex County if the ordinance had passed.

“They don’t care,” Wilmington, Del. Local 313 Business Manager Bobby Murri- an said. “They plactared their base and gave a little speech saying they would be for it at the state level. They just kicked it further up the road.”

Right-to-work laws allow employers to opt out of paying union membership dues, even when they enjoy the benefits of a union contract. They undercut wages and benefits for both union and nonunion workers, studies show.

Democrats have controlled the state House, Senate and governor’s office in Delaware for more than 20 years, but Murrian cautioned not to read much into that, noting the state’s loose banking regulations and the fact it is one of five states without a sales tax. Even Democrats often bow to corporate interests because of that.

So, Murrian said, IBEW members and other working family advocates must stay vigilant. “People are under the impression this is a labor-friendly state,” he said. “It’s not. It’s a blue state. There’s a difference.”

That was evident when the Republican minority introduced legislation on Jan. 9 to weaken the state’s prevailing wage law. Some observers think it has a chance to pass as part of a budget compromise. Prevailing wage laws set wages and working conditions before contractors can bid on a publicly-funded project.

The election of President Trump emboldened right-to-work advocates, including groups affiliated with the American Legislative Exchange Council, which writes sample legislation for state govern- ments that harms working families, Fridell said. Rob Arlett, the lone council member to vote for the ordinance, was Trump’s campaign chairman in Delaware.

“All we have to do is lose a couple of elections and this could be a right-to- work state,” said Fridell, who works out of Local 126’s office in Bridgeville, Del. The five county council members are all Republicans. They were expected to vote on the proposed law during a Jan. 2 meeting, but right-to-work opponents packed the meeting room and drew a large rally outside. The vote was pushed back one week, when it ultimately failed.

IBEW members and other unions again turned out in force. Fridell noted that Local 126 is at full employment, so mem- bers attending took vacation time or other leave to attend. Some Local 126 members in Sussex County are volunteer firemen, he said. Many attended a fire department community event the weekend before the vote wearing their IBEW shirts.

“That has a much bigger impact than anything that comes out of the Local 126 office,” he said. “It’s good to see them out there wearing their colors and telling their neighbors what’s going on. That is what we need at the end of the day.”

Local 126 Business Manager Rich- ard Muttick agrees the fight isn’t over, but praised Delaware’s legislative branch for standing strong against such legislation.

“I would like to thank Gov. John Carney,” said Fridell, who works out of the other representatives for not allowing the union-busting, right-to-work agenda to pass in the Delaware General Assembly,” Muttick said. “We must keep the political representatives accountable for their decisions and educate the membership on how they voted.”

Right-to-work has been a hot button issue across America in recent years. Last year, the GOP-controlled New Hampshire Legislature refused to pass a right-to- work law. Voters in Missouri used a petiti- on drive to force a statewide vote on a right-to-work law passed by the Republi- can-dominated legislature and signed by GOP Gov. Eric Greitens. The law is not being enforced, pending this November’s election results.

And the battles go on. In Ohio, legis- lators also introduced amendments to seriously weaken or do away with prevail- ing wage laws and project labor agree- ments. PLAs help ensure fair wages for workers and give local contractors and businesses a better chance to bid suc- cessfully on the work. They also help keep more tax dollars in local communities and provided a higher-skilled work force, including IBEW members.

“The news from Delaware is wel- come, but IBEW members and their loved ones must remember the assault on working families will only intensify,” inter- national President Lonnie R. Stephenson said. “The anti-worker corporate interests have spent billions to destroy gains we’ve made during the last 125 years, but we must continue to stand together. Our recent victories are a reminder of what’s possible when we do.”

Contract Negotiations; Community Outreach Project

L.U. 111 (em,govt,lctt,mt,o,rtb,spa&u), DENVER, CO — We ended the year 2017 with our annual Feed the Homeless event. This community outreach project is a huge undertaking. Members and their families volunteer, and some of our signatory companies provide the tools necessary to make the event such a successful contribution to the less fortunate and those who are suffering through tough times. Thank you to all who participated in the preparation and service—we could not do this without you.

As we usher in 2018, we celebrate the 111th Year Anniversary of IBEW Local 111. The contentious negotiations with PSCo/Xcel Energy continue as of press time, and the union is holding steadfast to keep the traditional working-class values like medical, pension benefits, and job security as our top priorities. The current political environment has sparked a wave of employees contacting Local 111 for representation in an effort to combat corporate greed. Our membership is growing and solidarity is only making us stronger and more vigilant in fighting for workers’ rights.

In 2018 make a point to attend your union meetings, Electricians Minority Caucus (EMMC) events, and the quarterly Union Safety Meetings. Be proactive and make your voices heard.

Union Sportsmen’s Alliance Dinner & Fundraiser

L.U. 113 (res,em,m электро), COLORADO SPRINGS, CO — In the fall of 2017, IBEW Local 113 hosted a Union Sportsmen’s Alliance dinner and fundraiser with many hunters and fishermen from different local unions participating. Attendees were treated to a fabulous steak and chicken dinner, as well as a night filled with lots of raffles and a live auction. This was a great chance for many members of all trades with similar interests to get together for a common cause, and win some fantastic prizes.

About $40,000 was raised, with half of it going toward a conservation project of our local’s choice, which is still to be determined at the time of this writing. With so much interest and the popularity of the fundraiser, we plan to host the event again next fall.

Stand for Working People; Focus on Safety & Solidarity

L.U. 125 (ctt,mt,r,b,spa&u), PORTLAND, OR — Change occurs in all aspects of our lives, and it is happening in our workplaces. In 2018, we must focus on safety, solidarity, and leadership. Everyone is responsible for his or her actions each day. Use your knowledge, skills and abilities to make sure that you go home safe each day. Acknowledge the positive things that happen each day. It is time to stop letting things divide us. You took an oath to uphold the IBEW Constitution. To stop the political, legislative and regulatory attacks on working people, we must stand up and protect our interests. That means focusing on our common interests: wages, hours and working conditions.

Leadership does not occur because of a title; it is earned. People may not like what you do or say, but you must do it for the right reason at the right time, not only when convenient or easy. Our country faces threats to our economic, political, racial and social justice. So-called “right-to-work” legislation is designed by anti-worker foes with the goal of destroying unions. We also want to let members and retirees know the dates for the upcoming awards banquets: Westside banquet (at Skagit Casino) — May 10; and the Eastside banquet (at Chateau Faire Le Point) — May 19. Please call the office for more details and to register.

Our organizers continue to plan and conduct “Mini Blitzes” in different parts of our jurisdiction recruiting several classifications. Our work picture remains strong and we thank our members and travelers for manning the work. Lastly, remember our Member Volunteer Program, where you can earn points by helping out. There are many great prizes including weekend getaways, apparel and gift cards. It is open to all members. Give it a try!

HOLIDAY FESTIVITIES; ‘A BRIGHT FUTURE’

L.U. 131 (ctt,mt,rb,spa&u), EVERETT, WA — IBEW Local 131 members and their families enjoyed three different holiday parties, all with great attendance. Wenatchee (152 attendees), Bellingham (305 attendees) and Everett (153 attendees) enjoyed food, gifts and a visit from Santa.

Special thanks to the chair’s for each of the holiday events: Wenatchee — Aaron and Londa Van Kirk; Bellingham — Tony and Sheila Wilson; and Everett — Colleen O’Brien.

We also want to let members and retirees know the dates for the upcoming awards banquets: Westside banquet (at Skagit Casino) — May 10; and the Eastside banquet (at Chateau Faire Le Point) — May 19. Please call the office for more details and to register.

New Solar Energy Incentive

L.U. 193 (ctt,mt,rb,spa&u), SPRINGFIELD, IL — Here in the Land of Lincoln we are still feeling Gov. Bruce Rauner’s attacks on unions and the middle class. This hurts funding for working people including IBEW Local 193. It might help to contact the governor? We have a project at Levit, Ray & Shoup Inc. coming out of the ground. Two hospitals in Springfield, St. John’s Hospital and Memorial Medical Center Hospital, have projects just starting. Employment has improved for this time of year in Local 193. A hammer training school is in the works for safety training.

A new solar energy incentive program is being funded for Local 193’s jurisdiction. Projects at Lincoln Land Community College and Springfield High School are among the first such projects, with funding from Ameren Illinois and Commonwealth Edison. $600 million is being earmarked for this progressive new statewide program, with projects being funded at six high schools and six community colleges.

We hope everyone managed to stay safe and warm this winter while working in the frigid temperatures!

Our condolences go out to the families of the following members who passed away: Tom Schafer and Mike Keafer.

2017 Food Bank Drive — Apprentices Serve Community

L.U. 197 (em), BLOOMINGTON, IL — Local 197 members celebrated the Christmas season at year’s end and welcomed the new year of 2018. We had our annual Christmas Party & Service Pin Ceremony in early December. We thank all the members and families who could come and take part in the festivities. Congratulations to those who received service pins for their commitment and dedication to the IBEW. The ceremony provides us an opportunity to reflect on the year and get together to spread holiday cheer with our brothers and sisters.

Our apprentices were busy over the holidays taking up canned food donations for a local food bank. It is great to see the apprentices giving back to the community, and we appreciate the effort they put forth. We hope 2018 is a great year for our local and the IBEW. Remember to get involved in the local and stay involved.

L.U. 133 members and their families celebrate the season at the local’s Annual Children’s Christmas Party.

‘Thanks to Volunteers’

L.U. 177 (buses,ctt,mt,rb,spa&u), JACKSONVILLE, FL — Local 177 thanks the many volunteers and officers who made our Children’s Christmas Party and Retire Christmas Party a huge success. Retired Bro. Bill Gehm just finished his 42nd year playing the part of Santa for the Children’s Christmas party. Everyone who attended seemed to have a wonderful time.

Work in the area has slowed up again, after we enjoyed a busy November that actually helped out a few travelers for the month. We look forward to the possibility of some new projects in the area for 2018. A big thank-you goes out to all those locals that have been able to employ our traveling brothers and sisters.

We hope the new year brings prosperity and good health to all our brothers and sisters.

Stand in Solidarity: 2018 Midterm Elections

L.U. 269 (I,LL,rel,al,t&u), TOLEDO, OHIO — While 2018 brings us a new year, we still have the same old challenges. The Davis-Besse Nuclear Power Station will start its refueling outage; however, the fate of the power station, along with the fate of the entire nuclear power industry, is in the hands of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and the federal government. Also, the sale of Bay Shore Plant is still pending at the time of this writing.

The work picture on the outside remains good and should remain that way with warmer weather coming. As far as negotiations go, at press time preparations are being made to start WNW-Channel 24 negotiations shortly.

2018 is a very important year politically with mid-terms elections coming this fall. As you can see, politics play an important role in our future with organizations like TEC, the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio and the Federal Communications Commission making important decisions that shape our industries. We need to understand the political candidates’ positions on these issues and support those who support us, because our families and our way of life depend on it.

Until next time, work safe and try to stay warm.

The Spirit of Giving

Proud Traditions Celebrated

L.U. 269 (I,LL,rel,al,t&u), TOLEDO, OHIO — The holidays are about friends, family and tradition. One tradition that we are extremely proud of here at Local 269 is the annual visit to the Virgin Islands helping with hurricane restowork/life experience will aid them on their journey to a career and will have a positive impact. The children will have a better understanding of the work of the Electricians and how it helps our members.

L.U. 313 (I,LL), WILMINGTON, DE — This initial letter from the new officers of Local 313 finds us in good shape. With a few breaks, we hope to have as good a year as the second half of 2017 was.

A real test for this year is the same as usual: cre-gating ways to get members involved. It already started in January with asking the members of the E-Board to meet each month come up with ways to increase our 2017 goals, share, our contractor list, and spirit of brotherhood.

Member Participation is Key

L.U. 313 (I,LL), WILMINGTON, DE — This initial letter from the new officers of Local 313 finds us in good shape. With a few breaks, we hope to have as good a year as the second half of 2017 was.

A real test for this year is the same as usual: creating gating ways to get members involved. It already started in January with asking the members of the E-Board to meet each month come up with ways to increase our 2017 goals, share, our contractor list, and spirit of brotherhood.

The aim consistently is more work opportunities for our members, and without their input and effort, we would be spinning our wheels. The goal is to get everybody who wants to participate involved in the process.

To swap ideas call the Local 313 union hall at 302-328-0773 or send an email to beper@ibew313.org.

Another big challenge is to live up to the standard we’ve set. The combined efforts of members, officers and agents have made us leaders in the industry and in the state of Delaware. Carrying the torch is both humbling and an honor. We will continue the battle for better working conditions and higher living standards for the good men and women of this local.

We Are Union

L.U. 343 (I,SP), LE SUEUR, MN — Harry S. Truman, the U.S. president from 1945-1953, was quoted as saying, “The right to join an union of one’s choice is unquestioned today, and is sanctioned and protected by law.” How some things have changed in 66-plus years.

Minnesota is an island surrounded by so-called “right-to-work” states. Because of these laws, our fellow IBEW brothers and sisters living and working in “right-to-work” states are battling for their livelihoods. We are all electricians, but more importantly we are union electricians. The union is us. We must realize that our pay, benefits and retirement are not guaranteed. We cannot allow legislation to be passed that will weaken organized labor. The strength of our union is up to us.

Nineteen Local 343 members passed on last year. We honor and remember: David Campion, Peter Maness, John Roosen, Stan Gillman, Bob Sylvester, Jordon Hove, Lyle Bloedow, Jeff Coy, Morgan, Colleen Dillion, Bob Banaszak, Local 153.

We also thank all those who participated, including: Lynn Arwood, IBEW Professional & Industrial regional organizing coordinator; Joe DiMichele, P&K lead organizer; Mike Moran, state organizing coordinator; Paul Kanay, Michigan initiative; Michael Leda and Bob Banaszak, from Local 353; Steve Brown, Local 252; and Phil Barnett, Local 876.

As well present were Local 275 members: journeyman inside wireman Ryan Headley, and second-year apprentices Cale Gould, Pete Zuzelski, Kaleb Kerksra, Jordan Vargas, Mark Wallis and Adam Engle.

Thank you to Local 275 organizers Geoff Yonkers and Walt Christophersen for their efforts in coordinating all the day’s events.

‘Appreciation to All’

L.U. 351 (I,ST,al,t&u), FOLSOM, NE — Thank you to all Local 351 committee members for all the help throughout 2017. The Children’s Christmas Party was the largest ever, with over 700 attendees. At the party, members and their families enjoyed our retired Local 351 member Jim Ruff in the role of Santa. (Photo credit: Bill Hoosey.)

The new training center is an investment in the future of the union electrical industry for central Iowa, of which every contributing member can be proud.

Work in the area continues to be good.

Health Center Clinic Opens; Strength in Community

L.U. 357 (I,TT,al,t&u), LAS VEGAS, NV — We thank everyone who was involved with the opening of our new clinic. The Union Family Health Center is available for all members and their families. The center provides “no-out-of-pocket” visits and lab work to members and their dependents. Please come down to the center and meet our providers and see what they can do to help you!

Following the shooting tragedy that occurred in Las Vegas last October, we found strength in our community. Several of our members worked hard to get it where you earn it. Buy “Made in USA.”

Remember to RSVP for the 31st annual Local 343 Awards Banquet, scheduled for April 7, in Red Wing. Spend it where you earn it. Buy “Made in USA.”

New Training Center

L.U. 347 (I,MM,al,t&u), DES MOINES, IOWA — Beginning with hours reported in June of 2017 and continuing for 24 months, Local 347 and our NECA contractors have been contributing an additional 2 percent of gross labor payroll to the Des Moines (IATC).

This investment in the apprenticeship and journeymen training program is facilitating the purchase and remodeling of a new training facility.

The new building will have seven classrooms, a
BCIS (Building Industry Consulting Services Intl.), a dedicated conduit bending lab and many other hands-on labs. A photovoltaic array is being planned for the near future. The new building is 34,000 square feet, which is approximately four times the size of the old training center. LED lighting is featured in the classrooms and PoE (Power over Ethernet) lighting in the administration wing. Another attraction of the new training center is the wooded area that surrounds it; a Living History Farm is adjacent to this new property.

The new training center is an investment in the future of the union electrical industry for central Iowa, of which every contributing member can be proud.

Work in the area continues to be good.

help create a memorial park for those whose lives were taken on Oct. 1. In a few short days, our members helped turn an empty lot into a comforting place where people could go to try and make sense of the senseless. Thank you to all who helped.

Veterans Day weekend in November 2017 was the occasion for the grand opening of a center to help local veterans here in Las Vegas. In just a few weeks, many of our members and contractors stepped up and worked hard to make sure the Veterans Village in downtown was up and running.

Holiday Celebrations

L.U. 375 (catheyes.et.gov,modi), ALLENTOWN, PA — Local 375 had several celebrations throughout the month of December 2017. First, we had a Christmas party that featured entertainment from a magician and then Santa Claus, played by retired member Dale Clause. The kids received gifts and all in attendance enjoyed lots of holiday goodies. This family fun event was made possible by the wonderful ladies in our office, who ensure that it is a success each year.

The following week, we hosted our 2nd Annual Christmas Dinner Dance, organized by Todd Jones and the District Youth Committee (DYC). Members and their significant others enjoyed an evening filled with food, drinks and music. Our guests received gifts and then many also left with special prizes from our auction/raffle, which successfully raised $355. All funds were donated to the Neighborhood Center in Allentown, a place where our community children go throughout the winter. In solidarity.

IBEW Float in 2017 Parade

L.U. 429 (emiotic,op,ort,r18,ku), NASHVILLE, TN — Last year, local union members voiced their wish to see a Local 429 float included in Nashville’s 2017 Christmas parade. Bus. Mgr. Randy Clark set into motion the local getting back involved with the parade. Local 429 brothers and sisters put in some extra time to help build the local’s float.

On Saturday, Dec. 2, Nashville hosted its Annual Christmas Parade. The IBEW Local 429 float featured a “Warm Home” scene with a fireplace and tree, and family members rode on the float as it toured through downtown Nashville. It was an experience for all involved and the local was well-represented. The hats are off to the crew who helped build, transport and ride the float. From the staff, officers and members of Local 429, thank you to all who participated!

Local 429 enjoyed good employment through the holiday season. At press time, we were looking forward to a good work picture continuing through the winter. In solidarity.

Service Awards Presentation; Children’s Roller Skate Party

L.U. 545 (oi, st. JOSEPHE, MO — The local’s annual Christmas party was Dec. 7 last year. The local had the honor to award 52 IBEW years-of-service pins. Sixteen of those pins were presented to members with 40 or more years of service! Two members were awarded for 70 years of service: Leroy Hausman and Clarence B. Miller. Three members were recognized for 60 years of service: Thomas R. Lotz, Robert L. Flach and Merry Bowman.

Local 545 also held a children’s roller skate party in December. Twenty-five children and grandchildren of local members attended. Local 545 member Chad Moore also reached out and invited the children from the Noyes Home for Children to participate in the fun! The Noyes Home is a safe home-away-from-home for infants, young children and teens.

‘On the Comeback Trail’

L.U. 557 (umanitoba), SAGINAW, MI — Local 557 hosted a Strategic Organizing Planning Workshop to help propel this local into better days. A great deal of thanks for a great meeting goes to Virgil Hamilton, director of Construction Organizing, IBEW Members Development Dept., and all the other district organizers and state organizers who were in attendance from the super Sixth District. Free-flowing discussion was held and allowed members to dig deeper into some problems and roadblocks that the IBEW and this local face. We will now put together the plan for a comeback.

In the recent past, the work picture for Local 557 has been slow, leading members to seek work in sister locals. While we are thankful for these opportunities, putting members to work in their own jurisdiction is the ultimate goal. With the help of the Organizing Workshop, we can hopefully look forward to better days in this local. A few key projects will be going this spring and summer that will help us to rebound and move our local in the direction to make it beneficial for all electricians in the area.

Tribute to Volunteers; 75-Year Pin Service Award

L.U. 595 (i, st. Louis,mo) — 2017 wound down in December with our annual Santa at the Hall festivities, followed by the volunteer recognition meeting, and our Old-Timers Night celebration a few evenings later. Our Santa at the Hall celebration brings members and their families together to share in the holiday cheer, and all children receive a gift bag full of union-made-in-the-USA treats and toys.

All members who take time and volunteer on behalf of Local 595 are recognized each year at our volunteer recognition meeting. This is a longstanding tradition to honor the sisters and brothers who help carry our local. Thank you to all our 2017 volunteers!

We were fortunate to have one 75-year pin recipient at Old-Timers Night last year. Bro. Al Real was honored on Dec. 9, 2017, for his commitment to our local, the IBEW and our industry. After 75 years of service, Bro. Al continues to demonstrate dedication to Local 595. We are eternally grateful to Bro. Al and were honored to share that moment with him.

Contract Updates; Facebook Construction Project

L.U. 545 (catheyes.et.gov,loc,al,ku), ALBUQUERQUE, NM — After 50 years of separate contracts on “the hill” (Los Alamos National Laboratory), the maintenance and construction contracts were combined in December 2017. Construction and maintenance will now work under the same agreement except for the wages; construction will still be tied to the state agreement.

The Annual Children’s Christmas Party last year was again a huge success. We had a change of venue in 2016, and last year’s event once again was held downtown at the Wool Warehouse. The committee did a great job as usual, and of course Santa was there to take pictures and hand out stockings.

The Facebook construction project has staffed up to 350 men on the job, with more hiring still to come. Late last year Facebook announced it would be building two more phases, so things should be busy over there for some time.

In January the ruling was announced that there would not be another run-off election for business manager, so the current staff will stay in place.

Local 625 extends condolences to families and friends of recently deceased members: Jimmy E. Elliott, Milton E. Sliford, Russell E. Bolin, Vivian C. “Rainbo” Romero, Jack R. Marker, Peter M. Calderon, Raymond A. Cordova, Ralph E. Cochrane and Danny Jaramillo.

2017 Events a Success
L.U. 639 (laes/em/lt/mark/ml), HALIFAX, NOVA SCOTIA, CANADA — Congratulations to members who recently completed their apprenticeship program and received their Certificate of Qualification: Bros. Jacob Mason, Kyle Olsen, Matt Russell, Tony Handsperger, Ernest Perrin and Richard Bouillier. Recently retired members include Bros. Norman Collier, Rod Mertle and Kim Newcombe. Congratulations to all and very best in your retirement!

Sadly, we lost one retired member, John MacKinnon, who passed away in October. He was 72. Our sympathy goes out to his family.

On Nov. 18, our Next Gen Committee rented a skybox at a Halifax Mooseheads QMJHL (Quebec Major Junior Hockey League) game. The skybox was full — 24 members attended and all had fun. The Mooseheads won 6–5 against the Cape Breton Screaming Eagles.

Our Annual Kids’ Christmas Party was Dec. 2 at Hatfield Farm in Hammonds Plains, with 216 members and family in attendance. Our Annual Christmas Dinner and Dance was held at the Marriott Harbourfront Hotel in Halifax on Dec. 16. Live entertainment featured The Usual Suspects. We had a record attendance of over 266 members and spouses! These events are made possible through our Recreation Fund.

We held a Job Steward Course on Dec. 13-14, and we had a full class of 22 members in attendance.

Brad Wood, Organizer/B.R./P.S.

75th Anniversary Celebration
L.U. 639 (laes), SAN LUIS OBISPO, CA — IBEW Local 639 celebrated our 75th Anniversary/Christmas Party on Dec. 16 last year at The Madonna Inn in San Luis Obispo.

Distinguished guests included Ninth District Int. Vice Pres. John J. O’Rourke, Ninth District Int. Vice Pres. Emeritus and former business manager Mike Mowrey, Int. Rep. Ken Schempinski, and State Organizing Coordinator Claude “C.J.” Johnson. The festivities were well-attended, dinner was exceptional, numerous prizes were raffled and everyone received special gifts commemorating the 75-year anniversary.

Congratulations to retired members and service pin recipients: 70-year member Wilburn “Woody” Woods, and 50-year members Stan Garland Sr. and Kurt McClave, P.S.

Local 1249 Pres. and Organizer Nick Paquet gets arrested for staging a sit-in at the office of Sen. Susan Collins in Maine when he and four other union-affiliated members were arrested (see photo above) for not leaving Collins’ office. The sorry part is however, a light at the end of the tunnel with the Georgia Cyber Innovation & Training Center project is coming up soon. It is a $160 million construction project located across the street from the union hall with a view of the Savannah River. Our members on this job have been making 10 percent over our commercial scale; this is additional pay that the contractor and the union hall agreed on and, with all the work going on in the area, has greatly helped staff the project.

Across the river, the Augusta Greenjackets stadium will be completed just in time for the first ballgame in April — another quality project done by the IBEW.

At Augusta National Golf Club, home of the Masters Tournament, we completed a large retail complex that will be opened for the tournament. This job also paid an additional 10 percent, which helped man the project. The quality and craftsmanship are amazing. You can tell the IBEW installed this job.

Several projects for the city are coming up. I am working with the mayor to stay on top of this work and will make sure we get our fair share. All the work coming to our area will keep us busy for several years.

The Savannah River Project should gain more projects soon. The Mixed Oxide Project (MOX) is hanging in there. There is a threat every year to cut funding; that is a continuing battle with our legislators, but it’s a battle we will fight to win. The Liquid Waste Contract was awarded to a new contractor; once the transition is fully complete, there should be some hiring for that project. The Salt Waste Processing Facility picked up additional work and should be hiring more. The SWPF agreed a few years back to pay 25 percent over scale to attract and maintain manpower. The previous main project was completed ahead of schedule and under budget. Good job, IBEW.

Remember to save for the future. Many members are working a lot of overtime. The extra money will help your family at a future time when overtime may not be as plentiful.

Until next time, God bless.

2018 Member Participation — ’The Key to Our Success’
L.U. 1701 (cathv,ltw), OWENSBORO, KY — Reflecting upon 2017, work in the area was great. However, it was a year of loss legislatively, with Kentucky becoming a so-called “right-to-work” state and repealing our prevailing wage. The beginning of 2018 however, a light at the end of the tunnel with the ‘The Key to Our Success’ project was completed just in time for the first ballgame in April — another quality project done by the IBEW.

At Augusta National Golf Club, home of the Masters Tournament, we completed a large retail complex that will be opened for the tournament. This job also paid an additional 10 percent, which helped man the project. The quality and craftsmanship are amazing. You can tell the IBEW installed this job.

Generosity of Members — Annual Competition/Fundraiser
L.U. 1249 (shs/lt/1,000), SYRACUSE, NY — In the fall of 2017, Local 1249 held the 2nd Annual Beard for Brothers Competition. Over $4,000 was raised and was once again given to the NSUJL (National Sisterhood United for Journeymen Linemen) to help fallen or injured brothers and sisters and their families. We raised more money in 2017 than in 2016, and we hope it continues to grow each year. We cannot wait to see what we can do next November. Thank you to everyone who participated! We also had a record-breaking collection of toys for Toys for Tots in 2017. Thank you to everyone who contributed! We are very proud of the generosity of our members.

Accompanying this article is a digital rendering of the new office building for the Local U.L.U. 1249 in the New York State Lineman’s Safety Training Fund, and Local 1249’s Pension and Insurance Funds. (Photo above.) After months of meeting with the builders and architect, and after a very cold winter, construction should be starting soon!

Volunteers Step Up — Holiday Community Service
L.U. 1347 (ees/em/bk), CINCINNATI, OHIO — On Dec. 19 last year, Local 1347 members donated stuffed toy animals to the day care center for The Children’s Home of Cincinnati. Several members handed delivered the toys to a class of children under the age of six, who were delighted. We look forward to donating again next year.

On Dec. 21, the Local 1347 membership donated 600 stuffed animals to Cincinnati Children’s Hospital to give each child a present for the holidays. (See photo at bottom, right.) These donations were made possible by the membership through the selling of union pins and license plate covers.

Before Thanksgiving, Local 1347 members did a wonderful job giving back to the community by participating in the Fall Feast 2017 event at Duke Energy Convention Center, providing Thanksgiving meals for those in need. Members also participated in the winter coat drive effort.

On Dec. 30, IBEW members from several Ohio locals volunteered for a community service project at Matthew 25 Ministries in Cincinnati. Participants included members from Locals 71, 212, 1224 and 1347. The volunteers helped sort and distribute needed items (such as clothing, personal care items, books, etc.) to help people from all across the country whose lives have been interrupted by tragedies beyond their control.

On Dec. 2, Local 1347 volunteers also delivered stuffed toy animals for the young children at St. Joseph Orphanage in Cincinnati to brighten their Christmas season.

Strong Work Picture
L.U. 1579 (bk), AUGUSTA, GA — The work situation in Augusta remains strong. In addition to the big project at Vogtle Electric Generating Plant, we also have multiple other projects under construction. Although there are too many to name, I will report on a few.

The Georgia Cyber Innovation & Training Center project is coming up soon. It is a $160 million construction project located across the street from the union hall with a view of the Savannah River. Our members on this job have been making 10 percent over our commercial scale; this is additional pay that the contractor and the union hall agreed on and, with all the work going on in the area, has greatly helped staff the project.

Spring 2018 Activities

RETIREEs CLUB OF L.I. 3, NEW YORK, NY, NORTHERN NEW JERSEY CHAPTER — Greetings and belated good wishes for a happy, healthy, fun new year to all! At this writing, we were experiencing a very cold, snowy winter, as several of our snowbirds had taken off for warmer climates. We continue our monthly meetings and enjoy keeping in touch with each other.

We had a wonderful holiday party in December at Seasons Catering in Washington Township. Everything was great including the food, decor, ambiance, DJ, and of course getting out on the dance floor and having a great time!

We look forward to upcoming activities in the spring, including a casino bus trip, our spring luncheon, and a June bus trip to Niagara Falls and Toronto. Area clubs are welcome to join us on this trip in June!

Strength in Solidarity

RETIREEs CLUB OF L.I. 53, KANSAS CITY, MO — Brothers and sisters, by the time you read this, we will be well into the new year. For most of us it was a very cold and nasty start for early 2018. Hopefully, everyone had a great holiday season. If you didn’t make it to the 50th anniversary celebration, you missed one heck of an event.

2018 will be a very busy year. We will have our retiree luncheon in May — more information on that to come. We will also have our 30th Annual Crappie Tournament/Fish Fry on June 9. Contact the union hall for more info. This is always a great event and very well attended.

As most of you know, this is a big election year. We must elect people who support unions and the working men and women in this country. Also, on the November ballot in Mississippi is a measure to repeal the anti-worker “right-to-work” law. We must defeat right-to-work and send a strong message to the politicians that we are not buying their lies and deceit. We can do this, but it will take all of us working together.

Contact the union hall to see how you can help.

Holiday Auction Benefits

Children's Research Center

RETIREES CLUB OF L.U. 257, JEFFERSON CITY, MO — On Dec. 12, the Retirees Club met for our annual Christmas luncheon hosted by Local 257. We thank Local 257 members for catering the luncheon. We appreciate their hospitality. After the luncheon an auction was held. All proceeds went to the St. Jude's Children's Research Center. We thank Mike Fanning, Local 257 organizer, for being the auctioneer and we also thank those who brought items to be auctioned.

We were saddened by all the members we lost during 2017. Two members, Paul Gallatin, 87, and Richard Owen, 83, passed away on Dec. 16. Both were Local 257 electricians. We will miss them. Our thoughts and prayers go out to their families.

We thank all our members for making 2017 a successful year. A lot was accomplished, and we had a lot of good times.

2018 started out very cold. A vote to repeal the newly enacted anti-worker “right-to-work” law in Missouri will be on the ballot in November. We need to see that all our members and families get out and vote to repeal the “right-to-work” law. The state governor is trying everything possible to keep “right-to-work” in Missouri — so be sure to vote.

Celebrating 2017-2018

RETIREES CLUB OF L.U. 353, TORONTO, ONTARIO, CANADA — A highlight of our 2017 events was our 32nd Annual Retirees Christmas Dinner/Dance, which was enjoyed by over 750 retirees and guests from IBEW Locals 252, 220, 203 and 814. The event took place at the Parkview Manor Banquet Hall.

2018 brings exciting adventures to Niagara Falls with “Utah Canada Eh” theatre in March, and our Annual Pin Award Breakfast on April 15, at which Local 353 will present IBEW 50-year service award scholarships, as well as service pins for 50 or more years of service.

Those eligible for service awards this year include: 188 members — for 50-year pins; 43 members — for 60-year pins; 39 members — for 65-year pins; and four members — for 70-year pins. A total of 290 service award scholarships will be presented. This will bring our list of living members with 50 or more years of service to more than 1,000 members.

Also, we will be acknowledging four retired members who are 100 years of age or more. They include: Frederick Coolin, age 102; Earl Clarke, 103; Valvada Stanley, 101; and Sydney Woolnough, 100.

The retired members of our North Unit, East Unit and South Unit all continue to enjoy the events and benefits provided by Local 353 Sports, Entertainment & Retirees Fund and all the efforts of Local 353 staff, our retiree executive and volunteers.

Club Trips Planned

RETIREES CLUB OF L.U. 595, DUBLIN, CA — Happy new year from out West! We finished last year strong and jumped into 2018 with both feet. We elected club officers at our January luncheon. Welcome to new executive board member Kay Archuleta. Kay joins Pres. Abreu and fellow board members stepping up to serve another year. We thank former executive board member Mike Scharfer for his longtime participation and service to the club and wish him and his wife, Liz, the best as they relocate to El Dorado Hills.

We look forward to some neat day trips in upcoming months. We’ll head to San Francisco and Fisherman’s Wharf to tour the Boudin Bakery and Museum; to Pacific Grove with lunch at Fangando’s; and take a trip to Filoli Gardens in April. We plan overnights to Reno on the train in March, Yosemite and Chukchansi Gold Resort in June, and our 11-night cruise from Quebec City to New York City in October. We also have fun at our monthly themed luncheons, held the second Friday of each month, 11 a.m., at the union hall in Dublin. Sign up for our club if you haven’t already done so and join the fun.

Congratulations to club Treas. Linda Bratset! At our Christmas luncheon, Bus. Mgr. Dan Chivello presented Linda with a certificate, and later a plaque, giving her honorary membership in the IBEW. Linda is the backbone of our Retirees Club, serving as long-time treasurer and go-to person for everything. She is only the fifth person in the 110-year history of our fine local to receive this well-deserved honor. Congratulations, Linda!

2018 Workers Memorial Day

RETIREES CLUB OF L.U. 611, ALBUQUERQUE, NM — In December, Local 611 held its annual family Christmas Party at the old Wool Warehouse on First Street. About 500 attended, and plenty of delicious food was served by Hacienda Restaurant. A separate company was in charge of decorations, disco, face painting etc. for the kids, as well as the cleanup afterward. So, it was nice that rather than having a team of Local 611 members responsible for all the work involved, everyone could instead just enjoy the festivities. Many retirees and their families attended and everyone had a wonderful time.

We retirees, when able, should volunteer to help fellow retirees who may need assistance because of age or health problems. Generally, retirees are reluctant to ask for help, so we need to reach out and assist when we see the need. Our famous ees are reluctant to ask for help, so we need to reach

Quite a few of us received our 50-year pins and watches the first week in December, myself included. Wishing all a blessed new year.

IBEW Crews Bring Light, Livelihood Back to Virgin Islands

As cruise ships returned to St. Croix last November, tourists seemed surprised to see so many work crews busy on the largest of the U.S. Virgin Islands. “Everyone knows what the hurricanes did to Puerto Rico, but they don’t know how hard they hit here,” journeyman lineman J.D. Griffith said in mid-January, talking by cell phone from an island cemetery where he was running new power lines to a church.

Just hours before Hurricane Maria made landfall in Puerto Rico on Sept. 20, its Category 5 force laid waste to St. Croix. Neighboring islands St. Thomas and St. John were in ruins already, battered less than two weeks earlier by Hurricane Irma’s 135-mph winds.

Power lines, trees, roofs, glass, cars, appliances, furniture and bits of every other imaginable debris were strewn everywhere. Travel was treacherous, especially in the克思is from virtually every state, all IBEW members working under contract with Hurricane Energy on St. Croix, arrived on the island in early October. In the months since, said crews have “completely rebuilt the whole infrastructure. We’ve set tens of thousands of poles, we’ve run hundreds of miles of wire.”

St. Thomas and St. John have been similarly revived thanks to IBEW crews, who, like Griffith, were stunned by what they saw at first.

“With Hurricane Katrina, Hurricane Rita, you had more water damage, more flooding,” said Daniel Best, a member of St. Louis Local 2 and general foreman for BBC Electrical on St. Thomas and St. John. “This was more like a tornado hit, a really bad tornado. The damage was colossal.”

Brian Adams, a Western Area Power Administration line foreman, arrived on St. Thomas within days of Maria’s wrath with six other members of Vacaville, Calif., Local 1245. Interviewed by his local’s website, he said he worked on Hurricane Sandy recovery but “this was completely different. When we got to St. Thomas, there was nothing — no power at all anywhere throughout the island. The amount of work that was needed just to get their basic infrastructure — water desalination facilities, hospitals, that kind of stuff — back up, it was amazing to me.”

Overcoming those obstacles and many more, IBEW members had restored power to more than 90 percent of residents on the three islands by mid-January. “We’re finishing up, getting more or less to the last customers, getting them hooked up,” Eric Jack, a co-owner of BBC Electrical and member of Topeka, Kan., Local 304, said Jan. 18 while working on St. Thomas.

While they hail from virtually every state, all IBEW members working under contract with Hurricane Energy are being represented by Orlando, Fla., Local 222, which set up a temporary office in the capital, Charlotte Amalie.

Local 222 business representative Donnie St. John, who runs the office, said he can’t get over the kindness and generosity of people who were living in poverty even before the storms.

“I’ve never, ever worked for customers that treat us the way these people treat us,” he said. “They say that angels brought these men to their island. They would be happy even if they had nothing, and what little they have to give away, they give you without batting an eye. Your heart just melts helping them.”

Griffith had been on the island for 120 days as of Feb. 6, not counting a 10-day trip home to Connecticut for the holidays, where he briefly traded sweltering heat and humidity for 14 inches of snow and below-zero temperatures.

While he may go to Puerto Rico from St. Croix for more restoration work, he’s committed to head home for good by March 31. “We work every day, seven days a week, 12 hours a day. Every day is Groundhog Day,” he said with a laugh.

Most crews on the islands worked through Christmas. Best, the BBC foreman, was on St. John at the time and said the outpouring of appreciation from locals showed how fitting the island’s “Love City” nickname is.

“They could not believe we were working,” Best said. “They opened up restaurants. They opened their doors to us. They fed us, they nourished us.”

The St. John crews restored power for six or seven customers on Christmas Day. Compared to what linemen typically accomplish in a day of recovery work on the U.S. mainland, “the numbers don’t sound great,” Best said. “But there you don’t have to build a mile of line through a volcanic, mountainous region.”

Best’s crews were spread among resorts on St. Thomas and St. John, while Griffith and most IBEW linesmen on St. Croix were living on a Carnival cruise ship rented by FEMA. Once the island reopened to tourists, their ship had to pull out of port most days to make room for boatloads of vacationers. “No stragglers,” he said. “We have to be off by 6:30 in the morning and can’t return until 6:30 p.m.”

Though they could eat all they wanted for free on board, and took lunch to go, Griffith said he and many of his IBEW brothers began to favor fresh, local island food and were happy to support the restaurants and stores that began to reopen as restoration progressed.

Like other linemen, Griffith was overwhelmed by the warmth and values of the islanders. “They’re happy that they woke up this morning and that they’re with their families,” he said. “They have nothing, and they say, ‘Come in, come in.’ They cook for you, they catch tuna and make you dinner, they give you beer. They’re just so grateful you’re there.”

He said he has videos of children chasing his crew, “screaming with joy — loving, loving, loving us. The memories I have will be in in the back of my brain for the rest of my life.”

One especially eager and curious 10-year-old boy befriended Griffith’s crew, who equipped him with a vest and hard hat. “He keeps telling me, ‘I want to be a lineman, J.D. I want to be a lineman.’”
WHO WE ARE

IBEW Members Bring Holiday Joy to an Island in Ruins

One of Bobbie Lynn Mayfield’s greatest joys is making Christmas special for people who otherwise would have little or nothing under the tree.

But last Christmas she was 2,000 miles away from home, one of hundreds of IBEW linemen working 12-hour days, seven days a week to restore power to the hurricane-ravaged Virgin Islands.

Mayfield, a member of Detroit Local 17, decided she’d use whatever spare moments she had to make Christmas magic happen there, enlisting scores of enthusiastic union brothers to help.

A journeyman lineman for 27 years and one of just two women among signatory contractor Haglund Energy’s crews on St. Croix, Mayfield arrived in early November to a landscape of wreckage “like nothing I’ve ever seen before in my life,” she said.

She was straightening a power pole in a woman’s yard one day, chatting about the tradition she and her daughter share of adopting families in need for the holidays. Aware that many Crucians — as St. Croix natives are called — were impover­ished even before Hurricane Maria tore their island apart, Mayfield wanted to pitched even before Hurricane Maria tore their island apart, Mayfield wanted to “need routine, things they can depend on, because there have been so many things in their lives that they haven’t been able to depend on,” she said.

After the home’s 22 youngsters wrote their annual letters to Santa, Holtz converted them to lists that included each child’s initials, age, gender, clothes size, favorite color and favorite cartoon character. She also sent wish lists for six disabled adults, most of whom live in another Lutheran Social Services home on St. Croix.

Joy to an Island in Ruins

In this story, the author describes how Bobbie Lynn Mayfield, a journeyman lineman for the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW), organized a Christmas gift drive for residents of an island orphanage in the Virgin Islands. Mayfield and her team of union workers, who were working on the island to restore power after Hurricane Maria, wanted to bring holiday cheer to the children and families affected by the hurricane.

Mayfield and her group visited an orphanage and collected wish lists from the children. They organized a gift drive and collected items such as clothing, books, and toys. The wish lists included items like stuffed animals, dolls, and books, which were collected and distributed to the children.

After receiving the wish lists, Mayfield and her team went shopping and gathered the requested items. They then delivered the gifts to the orphanage, where the children were overjoyed to receive the presents. The author mentions that the children thanked Mayfield and her team, expressing their gratitude for the gifts.

The author also describes the overall atmosphere of the island during the Christmas season. It was a time of rebuilding and recovery, with many children and families facing difficult circumstances. Despite the challenges, the spirit of giving and the joy of the holiday season brought hope and comfort to those in need.

This story highlights the generosity and compassion of the IBEW members, who went above and beyond their work to bring joy to the children of St. Croix during the holiday season. It demonstrates the impact that small acts of kindness can have on those who are affected by disasters and how unions can play a vital role in supporting their communities.

IBEW Members Near Completion on Massive Canadian Hydro Project

ne of the largest transmission power projects in North America is coming to an end, and when it does, it will have connected two Canadian provinces for the first time and employed approximately 3,500 IBEW members along the way.

"This project put us on the map," said Halifax, Nova Scotia, Local 1928 Business Manager Jim Sponagle.

The Maritime Link project is the final stage of the Lower Churchill project, named for the river in Newfoundland and Labrador that is supplying the hydroelectricity that will power more of maritime Canada and even parts of the northeastern United States. It also connects the power grids of Newfoundland and Labrador and Nova Scotia for the first time.

The first stage involved building a dam and generating facility at Muskrat Falls in Labrador and constructing a transmission line that connected Labrador to the island of Newfoundland, another first. The entire project, which crosses the Cabot Strait to the south, and the interior of Canada, stretches approximately 1,400 kilometers across northeastern Canada.

"The scope of this project demonstrates the unmatched skill and professionalism of our members," said First District International Vice President William Daniels. "Everyone involved should be proud of what they accomplished."

Construction of the C$5.6 billion Maritime Link began in 2014 and transmitted the first electrons via a test run in December 2017. The Link begins in Granite Canal in southeast Newfoundland, crosses the Cabot Strait to the south, and terminates in Woodbine, on Nova Scotia's Cape Breton Island. The project included construction of a new, 500 megawatt, high-voltage direct current transmission line as well as a 2.3-kilovolt high-voltage alternating current line.

The undertaking also includes two 200 kilovolt, 170-kilometer submarine cables, 50-kilometers of overland transmission in Nova Scotia and 300 overland kilometers in Newfoundland. Existing infrastructure will carry the electricity through Nova Scotia and into New Brunswick and the United States.

Like other parts of the Lower Churchill project, the Maritime project was done under the Code of Excellence on the Newfound- land side, with the IBEW as the sole union involved. Approximately 3,500 Local 1928, Newfoundland and Labrador, Local 1620 members did all the transmission construction work and the related electrical station construction, which included switchyards, converter stations, groundings, sites and transition compounds, Business Manager Don Murphy said. Other Canadian locals from across the country assisted by supplying personnel, electricians and assemblers, Murphy said.

On the other side of the Cabot Strait, approximately 250 to 300 members of Local 1928 built the transmission lines that ran from the landing site at Point Aconi to the destination in Woodbine, where members also built the interior of a converter station. Sydney, Nova Scotia, Local 1852 members also worked on the project, Sponagle said.

Not only did Local 1928’s membership grow by 25 percent, it did so in an economically depressed area of the province, said Sponagle.

Local 1928 also joined with Emera, the power company behind the Maritime Link, and the local building trades to donate $40,000 to four area nonprofits.

"It was pretty humbling to give back to the community I came from," Sponagle said.

The transmission work was completed in 2017, with only reclamation and some electrical site construction left to finish, Murphy said.

Connecting Nova Scotia to Newfoundland and Labrador’s hydroelectricity will help the province meet new federal regulations that require reducing carbon emissions by 50 percent by 2030. The Nova Scotia government also has a target to get 40 percent of its power from renew- ables by 2020.

The project also replaces a thermal power plant in Muskrat Falls as well as the power plant at Muskrat Falls. Currently, there are about 30 workers hired and involved in training and commissioning activities, some of whom transferred from the Halifax plant.

Les membres de la FIOE ont presque terminé l’immense projet hydroélectrique canadien

Le lien maritime de la Nouvelle-Écosse à Terre-Neuve-Labrador permettra à la province de répondre aux nouvelles réglementations fédérales qui vise à réduire les émissions de carbone de 50 pour cent d’ici 2030. Le gouvernement de la Nouvelle-Écosse vise également à obtenir 40 pour cent de sa production d’électricité à partir des énergies renouvelables d’ici 2030.

Le projet remplacera également la centrale thermique à Holyrood, Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador, l’endroit où nos membres du local 1928 ont participé à la construction et à la construction des stations électriques qui comprennent des postes électriciens, des postes de conversion, des sites de mise à la terre et des terminaux aérosuréal des, dits le gérant d’affaires Don Murphy. La participation d’autres locaux canadiens à travers le pays a permis de fournir des monteurs de lignes, des électriciens et des assemblers, ajoute Murphy.

De l’autre côté du détroit de Cabot, environ 250 à 300 membres de la section locale 1928 ont construit les lignes de transmission qui part du site d’arrivée située à Point Aconi jusqu’à la destination située à Woodbine, où les membres ont également construit l’intérieur du poste de conversion. Les membres de la section locale 1852, situés à Sydney en Nouvelle-Écosse, ont également travaillé sur le projet, dit Sponagle.

Non seulement que le nombre de membres du local 1928 a augmenté de 25 pour cent, mais il a ainsi été fait dans une région rurale et économique de dépeuplée de la province, exprime Sponagle.

La section locale 1928 s’est ainsi jointe à Emera, la compagnie électrique qui fournit l’électricité à la Nouvelle-Écosse et qui fonde le Northern-Brunswick et aux États-Unis.

Comme dans d’autres parties du projet du Bas-Churchill, le projet maritime a été effectué en vertu du Code d’excellence du CITE de Terre-Neuve et la FIOE étant le seul syndicat impliqué. Environ 500 membres du local 1620 de Saint-Jean de Terre-Neuve et Labrador ont effectué les travaux de transmission et à la construction des stations électriques qui comprennent des postes électriciens, des postes de conversion, des sites de mise à la terre et des terminaux aérosuréal des, dit le gérant d’affaires Jabez Lane, et environ 15 membres y resteront, car la station sera transformée en une centrale pour un compresseur synchronisé.

Lane mentionne que la FIOE aura la juridiction sur les convertisseurs, les compresseurs synchronisateurs, les postes électriciens et la ligne de transmission de 1 100 kilomètres de long depuis Soldiers Pond jusqu’à Muskrat Falls ainsi que la centrale électrique située à Muskrat Falls. On y retrouve présentement 30 travail- leurs recrutés qui participent à une for- mation et des activités de mise en se- rvice, dont certains ont été transférés de la centrale d’Holyrood.

The Maritime Link is the final stage of the Lower Churchill project that employed approximately 3,500 IBEW members and laid more than 1,400 kilometers of transmission line, connecting the power grids of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and Labrador.
